Across America, the opportunity gap is widening.

Without opportunity, children have little hope of overcoming the terrible isolation, obstruction and exclusion of poverty.

And if we maintain the status quo, poverty will increasingly erode and divide our communities and economy, now and for generations to come.

But there is hope. And there is something you can do.

For Connecticut to break the cycle and cost of poverty, we must better understand the problem and work together to give all children the opportunities they need to succeed.

Join a conversation to motivate community action.

On July 21, the Hartford Foundation for Public Giving invites you to The Bushnell for an evening with Dr. Robert Putnam, Malkin Professor of Public Policy at Harvard University and author of Our Kids: The American Dream in Crisis.

We will learn how the opportunity gap affects our kids, what it costs our communities, and how we can work together to close it.

We need business and community leaders, policy makers and parents, and all those willing to be mentors and good neighbors to attend. Let's work Together for Good.
